This is the story of the hop harvests in the Northwest, as they are given by one of the pickers himself. It is a truthful account of the conditions under which the workers are being forced to work in the fields. The story was told to the author by a picker who had worked for several years in the hop fields. He describes the long hours worked, the low wages paid, and the poor living conditions. The author also provides evidence of the use of poisonous chemicals in the fields, which are toxic to both human beings and animals. The story serves as a warning to others who may be considering working in the hop fields, and as a reminder of the dangers associated with agricultural work.

SERIOUS PROBLEMS FACE CONVENTION OF FARM WORKERS

By LELAND OLDS, Assistant Press

The farmers in the Western States of the United States are facing serious problems in their efforts to maintain their farms and their livelihood. The farmers are facing severe crop failures, low prices for their crops, and a lack of credit to purchase the necessary inputs for their farms. The farmers are also facing the threat of drought and other natural disasters, which can devastate their crops and their livelihood. The farmers are also facing the threat of government policies that are not supportive of their efforts to maintain their farms and their livelihood. The farmers are facing the threat of government policies that are not supportive of their efforts to maintain their farms and their livelihood.

Great Needs of Lumber Workers in Montana Call for Immediate Action. By John D. English. [Speech]

Some reason why the lumber workers of Montana believe that this conference and those who attend it should organize. The reasons are many, and will be brought out in the following order: first, the need of the trade; second, the need of the union; third, the need of the community; fourth, the need of the nation; and fifth, the need of the world.

For many years, the Japanese have lived in the United States as second-class citizens. They have been discriminated against, denied equal rights, and subjected to prejudice and hatred.

There is a great need for the Japanese Americans to organize and fight for their rights. They must stand up for themselves and demand equal treatment under the law.

The Japanese Americans have been through a lot of hardships. They have suffered discrimination and prejudice, but they have never given up. They have fought back and have made progress.

The Japanese Americans are a valuable asset to the United States. They are hardworking, devoted, and loyal. They have contributed a lot to our country, and we should recognize and appreciate their efforts.

The Japanese Americans are a vital part of our society. They deserve to be respected and treated with dignity. We must stand up for them and ensure that they are given the rights and opportunities that they deserve.
The Communist Party Gone Bloody!
Written by Bertha Allen

Workers produce more than they consume themselves. The Communist Party has an annual subscription campaign in the various cities for the purpose of providing a part of the necessary funds for the continuation of the party's work. The subscription campaign is open to all persons who wish to support the aims of the Communist Party.

There are many reasons why it is important to have a strong subscription campaign. The Communist Party needs the funds to support its activities, which include organizing workers, publishing literature, and running its offices.

The subscription campaign is a way for the Communist Party to involve its members in the work of the party. Members who participate in the campaign are more likely to be active in the party and to take a strong interest in its goals.

The subscription campaign is also a way for the Communist Party to reach out to new members. People who are interested in supporting the work of the Communist Party can become members by participating in the campaign.

In summary, the subscription campaign is an important tool for the Communist Party. It provides the funds needed to support the party's work, involves members in the party's activities, and reaches out to new members who are interested in supporting the party.
