Don't Forget the Class Struggle

Organisation is good; without organisation nothing can be accomplished. It does not follow, however, that any organisation serves the best interest of the common people; it doesn't follow that anything that, parades under the name of "union" is good for the wage earners and the working classes. No organisation is in itself a guarantee that some point in the citizens' alliance and in common

The fact that the union has failed does not mean that the workers are defeated. In the face of the obvious fact that the union is not successful, we should express our activities, it is the rank and file of the working class who should express the determination of the working class in the future. Many employees have found labor conditions "good," we have the right to demand better conditions from the C.J.P. and the A.F.L. to that effect. But without the workers' strike and a refusal to suffer the interests of two masters.

Looking the World Over

International Notes of Concern to Labor

By JOHNNY LIND

Cleveland, Ohio - The International Union of Carpenters and Joiners, whose headquarters are in this city, reported today that it has been decided by the Executive Committee of the Union that the International will not send delegates to the World Congress of the International Labor Organization to be held in Paris, France, early in September.

The International Labor Organization, an international body composed of the labor federations of various countries, is to meet in Paris to consider the working conditions of laborers in different parts of the world, and to frame recommendations for the improvement of working conditions.

The International stated that it had decided not to send delegates to the World Congress because it feels that the International Labor Organization is not a body which can achieve results of any importance without the active support of the labor federations of the United States. The International Labor Organization was founded in 1889, and the first congress was held in Paris in 1890.

LEWISIZED SOFT COAL MINERS GET SMALL PAY

After deductions are made for the average American (Lewisville, Ohio, 1907), it tends to be a way of life, not a way of work for the last term of LILLIAN.

According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor, a study of the wages and hours of work of coal miners employed in 1907

"At the present rate of coal production, we are not

The coal industry is in a state of agreement to sell coal at a rate of $1.50 per ton, which is the same rate as the union coal miners are working at. The union coal miners have the major share of the work in the mines, and the strike is on the outside.

The strike is on the outside, and that may not be a good idea. The miners have been working at the same rate as the union coal miners, and the strike is on the outside.

About one-thousand of the total number of miners in the area are employed at the mines. The average daily wage for a miner is $1.50, but there are cases where the miners are paid more than $2.00 per day.

Most of the miners are employed in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio. About 65% of the total labor force is employed in the coal mines.

The average yearly wage incomes of all the labor force are $1,000. The average yearly wage income of the labor force in 1907 was $1,000.

The coal industry has been called a "sick industry" because of the long depression that has been going on in the industry. The miners' wages have been cut and the hours they work have been increased.

Workers Have the Right

The coal industry is not a long depression industry, and the miners have the right to work. The miners have the right to strike for better working conditions. The miners have the right to work for a better wage.
